New Police Constables

Circa £28k (inclusive of London weighting and allowances)

The Met will soon be recruiting more new police constables.

To tackle today's complex policing challenges, we need a workforce made up of people from across London's communities. As a result, we must continue to recruit the right people from every background and use the full spectrum of their skills, knowledge and experience to make London safer for everybody.

If you're thinking of becoming a police constable there's something you need to know. New Met Police recruits must now have completed the Certificate in Knowledge of Policing (CKP). CKP students learn about the law, policing, and the critical decision-making skills that are required in the job.

If you're interested or know someone who is, start preparing by registering your interest in applying by calling 03300 227 899 before 19 July 2013.

For more information about becoming a police constable, the CKP and details on how we can support you throughout the process visit www.metpolicecareers.co.uk/ckp

Get professional. Get policing.
